

Overpopulation Bomb Destruction of the Earth Discrimination Against Women

Very quickly the world population will double and triple, if the insanity of uncontrolled procreation is not put a stop to soon; and it is irrefutable that all social, political, economic, natural, environmental and climatic problems, and thus all global ecological problems on Earth, can be traced back to the population explosion resp. the overpopulation.

From the population boom to the environmental collapse, and the near future of our planet Earth.

When looking at the population increase for 1993, one is alarmed to observe that, over the course of one single year, almost 100 million more human beings populated the Earth. Viewed more precisely, the calculation then looks such that, every second, three newborn humans came into the world:

1 second	=	3 humans
1 minute	=	180 humans
1 hour	=	10800 humans
1 day	=	259200 humans
1 week	=	1814400 humans
1 month	=	7884000 humans
365 days =1 year	=	94608000 humans

1994, by contrast, was yet another year that kicked way over the traces in terms of offspring production, and, with twice as many humans being born, making the calculation look like this:

1 second	=	6 humans
1 minute	=	360 humans

1 hour	=	21600 humans
1 day	=	518400 humans
1 week	=	3628800 humans
1 month	=	15768000 humans
365 days =1 year	=	189216000 humans

This is a fact that has not been noticed and realised by the 'world watchdogs' and other organisations dealing with it, and also not by the statisticians, because they simply stubbornly go by a sham calculation scheme that establishes a calculation that is estimated approximately by rule of thumb. It is a fact, however, that time and again there are years that run exceptions to the rule in terms of population increase, therefore it happens that more or fewer new Earth citizens are being born. And 1994 was such a year, when twice as many offspring than expected came into the world. However, in addition to this fact there is the reality that the world's population is much larger than the statistics, at a rough estimate, would have the human beings believe, since many countries can only give estimated information on their population, thus as a rule many are forgotten, which in the end amounts to between 200 and 500 million in each case. Thus, the 'world watchdog calculation' and their statistics are not correct, which stated that 5.75 or 5.85 thousand-million¹ human beings populated the Earth at the beginning of 1995, because in reality there have already been 6.27 thousand-million human beings on the 14th of February 1995 (Note: 31.12.2020 = 9,163,081,008). So a whole lot more than was statistically claimed. But the 'world population watchdogs' do not seem to take it that seriously, since apparently a few hundred million are of no further importance. But this is exactly where they are seriously wrong, because it is already the case that every single human being counts and each individual contributes to the destruction and elimination of all life on Earth and of the planet itself, indeed in ever-increasing measure. Thus, at the beginning of 1995, the world was already populated with more than 6.27 thousand-million human beings, and since then the number has been increasing by 4 per second. The rate has dropped again somewhat, but it has nevertheless increased by one compared to 1993, which is an inevitable consequence of the fact that many more human beings have become fertile in the course of 1994 and are now taking advantage of this fact by bringing offspring into the world. About 3/4 of the human population lives in developing countries, however, about 2 thousand-million of those in turn are starving, and whereby death carries off 40,000 children every day who die of hunger and therefore of malnutrition. That is 14 million per year. Hunger gives rise to human adversities of all kinds, social tensions, revolutions and eventually civil wars and wars between countries, in which the fights for the distribution of goods becomes increasingly brutal and inhumane, and a human life counts for nothing at all. Entire nations plunge into terrorism, anarchy and chaos; starvation, misery, destitution, war, persecution and massacres force human beings to flee, resulting in migrations of the peoples on a huge scale and in an unprecedented form. In the spring of 1995 alone, around 200 million human beings were fleeing their homes. Like a gigantic human roller, the Third World is beginning to move, fleeing, at first only within its own regions, but in each case soon increasingly towards the North, to the industrial, economic and welfare nations, where full pots of food, wealth, prosperity and luxury, as well as job opportunities are tempting, although these are becoming fewer and fewer, because the incomers are perpetually occupying them and are working for lower wages than the indigenous persons, who are thus losing their income opportunities and become social benefit recipients.

The rich third of humanity in the Nordic industrial and economic countries earns far more than ten times the amount per capita than the human beings of the poor third-world countries of the South. And this rich third yields 4/5 of the world's economic performance. The unrestrained consumption binge of the human beings in the economic countries of the North, however, depletes 2/3 of all the Earth's resources, of all the raw materials and energy reserves of the planet. And the environmental damage of all sorts caused by the Nordic industrialised countries is much more extensive, damaging and destructive than all the third world countries combined. And this happens even though the industrialised countries have far better technologies, and so forth, at their disposal and are thus further advanced in environmental protection, in order to avoid damage to the environment, than is the case with the developing countries.

Around 70% of all motor vehicles in the world dominate the northern hemisphere, as a result of which the share of industrialised countries in the pollution of the atmosphere and the environment is accordingly very high. The human beings of the northern economic countries also consume almost 100 times the amount of water per person than the human beings of the Third World, and so citizens of the industrialised countries have the major and most massive share of the pollution of all water bodies, such as streams, rivers, lakes and seas.

The ever-increasing industrialisation of agriculture with its still relentless application of chemicals is completely emaciating the soil, resulting in steadily decreasing crop yields, as well as increasing erosion and an ever-accelerating species extinction. Also, not only are animals of all species senselessly shot and exterminated for 'sporting spirit' and other spurious reasons and out of sheer thirst to kill, excluding, of course, the gamekeeping and care of the gamekeeper and the hunter, but also the oceans as well as the streams, rivers and lakes are being overfished by high-tech, small-scale fishermen and women and by the most modernly equipped fishing fleets, which are decimating all aquatic animal populations consciencelessly and irresponsibly. But already the fish yields are decreasing quite rapidly, and many fish species and other aquatic creatures are on the verge of extinction, while others have already been eradicated. But also the third-world countries of the South practice irresponsible and felonious overexploitation of nature. Thus, the tropical rainforest is being criminally and systematically cut down, and by the beginning of the year 1995 it had already been shrunk, destroyed and devastated to half of its original size.

The dimensions and the speed of the environmental changes that are irresponsibly caused by humankind can be recognised clearly by the use of satellites. Thus, for example, satellite images have revealed that in Kazakhstan and Uzbekistan, in the lowlands of Turan, the Aral Sea has shrunk by half in just 30 years, whereby as much as 40% took place in only a few years. As a salt lake with no outlet, fed by the rivers Amударja and Syrdarja, which however still arrive at the lake only in humid years, it still measured 54,400 square kilometres in 1975. Due to the dewatering for irrigation, however, the lake shrank by as much as 40% in only 15 years until 1990 (note: today, in 2021, it has already dried up completely). This led to an irretrievable fish mortality in what had once been the fourth-largest lake on Earth, thus putting an end to fishing and the processing of fish. The farmers, technicians and scientists and also the government are to be blamed for this. Whilst some drained the water from the lake for intensive irrigation of gardens and agricultural estates, others provided the means and opportunities to do so, while the government responsible for it granted the permit and then stood on the sidelines. A doing and acting as is practically also the case in all other countries of the world, only each time altered to other things. Thus it can also happen that, for example, enormous destruction occurs also in the Mediterranean, which is mainly due to fertilisers and sewage of all sorts being washed out of the Po Valley and ending up in the sea, and which unstoppably contaminate the Adriatic, therethrough causing a massive algae plague every year to an increasing extent, which suffocates all lower life in the sea. But also seaports like Naples and Genoa, Brindisi, Catania, Syracuse, Trapani, Palermo, Marseille etc. etc., are involved, because they simply dump their toxic sewage into the sea.

Another major and global threat is the depletion of the Earth's ozone layer, also caused by the human beings fault and irresponsibility. It is not only over the South Pole that the ozone hole is getting bigger from year to year, because the vital protective layer against the UV radiation is also being destroyed elsewhere. The life-threatening UV radiation, which, coming from outer space, endangers all terrestrial life forms, is reaching the Earth with increasing intensity, because a rapid depletion of the ozone layer also over the northern hemisphere is already taking place and, having already become dangerously thin, in this form it is also already measurably and detectably slowly spreading to the temperate zones and is causing 'black cancer', or skin cancer, in humans. At the same time, an artificial and human-made greenhouse effect is spreading globally, out of which a climate collapse threatens to develop. Also, all kinds of abnormal natural disasters result from the human environment-destroying insanity, and already meteorologists are registering an increase in natural disasters, such as tropical cyclones, droughts and floods of anomalous form, however, also including earthquakes and volcanic eruptions, which scientists still claim to be all natural, although this assertion is not in accordance with the truth. And in fact, all these things, happenings and occurrences have long since ceased to fit into the familiar natural framework.

The Arctic and Antarctic poles and the ice sheets of Greenland along with the mountain glaciers are melting rapidly, wherethrough a global rise in the ocean waters becomes manifest. Entire low-lying island nations as well as coastal regions are being endangered and slowly but surely are threatened to disappear in the rising waters.

The human being, who so readily calls himself/herself the crown of Creation, has multiplied in sheer irrationality and selfishness to such an extent that he/she has become a threat with acts of Gewalt² to all life on a global scale – the most terrible thing that has caused worldwide, threatening changes to the entire world and already to countless lives. And humankind unstoppably continues to grow further at a tearing and continuously increasing pace. But this is the very reason why the Earth is turning more and more into a desert. The delusional procreation of descendants namely leads to all hardships and all misery and all social and ecological as well as economic terrible things, inexorably increasing immeasurably, right up to the point where there is no longer any hope of rescue.

The human being is a part of the Earth, but he/she does not understand the way of life. For him/her, one human being is not the same as another, for if one is of a different colour, of a different race or kind, or even if he/she is just a simple stranger, then he/she is not accepted, but is treated with contempt or hatred, defiled and persecuted. The might-greedy and mightful one takes the land and belongings of the helpless – and in the same form the human being also treats his/her home, the Earth, towards which he/she is like a stranger, and he/she is living only for his/her own benefit, however not for the harmony with the Earth and all life. Coming like a thief in the night, like a stranger, he/she steals whatever he/she needs from the Earth, or destroys and eliminates on it whatever he/she pleases.

² “There is no English word that conveys the true meaning of the German word ‘Gewalt’. ‘Gewalt’ is the brutal execution of elemental might and force, but it is far above all might and all force. ‘Gewalt’ exists in different and relative forms, one example being a ‘gewalttätige Gesinnung’ – expression from the character, personality, thoughts, feelings and emotions that shows the inclination to act with Gewalt. When human beings possess or carry out acts of Gewalt and it is not based in logic, then this usually involves violence, brutality, degradation and is terribly destructive.” (Meier, BEA 2010, The Goblet of Truth, page XIII, footnote)

He/she does not live with it, with Mother Earth, but he/she is its enemy, and when he/she has seized and subdued a part of it, he/she proceeds by doing the same thing in the next place.

The human being treats his/her home, the Earth as well as its atmosphere, all waters and the entire environment and all life-forms of all species and kinds as something that may simply be used, utilised, destroyed and also plundered, pillaged and discarded and eliminated after use. Humankind's greedy hunger for all that the Earth has to offer, as well as the human being's unrestrained delusional procreation of descendants, will engulf and destroy the planet along with all life, leaving nothing behind but a dead, barren desert.

How did the human being of Earth end up in this bleak and destructive situation in which he/she is living today? For this, the evolution from the first human being until today must be considered: it took several million years for the human species, the Homo sapiens, to multiply to such an extent, that it inhabited the entire world. In the year one (1) of the Christian era, only 102,465 million people lived on Earth. Then it took just another 1000 years for the entire population of the Earth to increase to 300 million. However, time and again, wars of all kinds, as well as rampantly spreading diseases and epidemics, carried off millions of human beings, in which case particularly the Middle Ages are to be mentioned in this respect. In Europe, in the 14th century, particularly the 'Black Death' was responsible for the population being decimated, since the Pestilence became so raging and rampant that the human beings died by the dozens and in the tens of millions in total. However, with the first positive medical advances, the human mortality rate quickly dropped again so that far fewer human beings died than were being born. Thus, the population grew faster and faster, reaching the first thousand-million mark in 1810. This, of course, also increased the number of new citizens on Earth and the speed at which the world population continued to grow. And already a dramatic problem began to emerge from this, indicating the course of the upcoming destruction of the entire habitat and that of life, as well as of the planet. So it was inevitable that already early warnings regarding the prevalent humanity and its destructive consequences were made but disregarded, just as they are today, since all the world is talking about the worldwide destruction caused by the overpopulation, while the problem of overpopulation, however, is not being accepted, but is being pushed away by the human being.

Already in 1926, humanity, with 2 thousand-million human beings, could already see a doubling of its numbers – after, believe it or not, a mere 116 years. By 1960, the figure had already risen to 3 thousand-million, and by 1977 to 4 thousand-million. So it took only 51 years for the next doubling. Ten years later, in 1987, the humankind of Earth already amounted to 5.1 thousand-million, and after only eight more years the number had risen to an astounding 6 thousand-million by the month of February 1995. This is around 300 million human beings more than the worldwide false statistics state. It took the species Homo sapiens several millions of years, namely around 4.5 million starting from the first human being, to reach a population of one thousand-million, but only a mere 185 years thereafter to establish a human population six times as large. But this is no wonder, when overpopulation advocates, such as the Catholic spiritual leader, the Pope, vehemently and guilefully mislead the human beings to it and virtually force them by means of the irrational belief to procreate descendants boundlessly in order to field as many believers as possible, who can be exploited by the Catholic Church. The Pope readily refers to a biblical and, to say the least, irrational and felonious order given in the Bible, which propagandises the insanity of the cultivation of an overpopulation, as is the case in the 1st Book of Moses, chapter 9, verse 7, with the following words:

“Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the Earth, and stir yourselves upon the Earth, so that there may be many of you upon it.”

And this is exactly what has happened and is still happening, in which case this is still being supported feloniously against humanity, life and the planet by the Pope and his cardinals, bishops and priests and so forth, as well as by the believers, by, on the one hand, criminally supporting the procreation of descendants – which is also officially being practised by certain countries and communities and so forth, which, for this purpose, pay large amounts of money for procreation and children's allowances to the subservient ones – and, on the other hand, by nipping all rationality in the bud due to their bondage to the Pope. And he prohibits not only the often even life-saving or also otherwise necessary abortion, but also any contraceptives or other measures that would prevent pregnancy and the procreation of descendants. He and his hangers-on claim that abortion or even contraception of any kind is blasphemous and unhuman. But what does the Pope have to say about the fact that innumerable women fall on hard times and become destitute when they fall pregnant or give birth to children, or when the descendants are being mistreated and maltreated by the parents or even only one parent, which also happens to many women, or when the children miserably starve to death because there is no food available to them? Is that not more malicious and unhuman? However, obviously neither the Pope nor all his hangers-on seem to care about that. And if a believer cares, then he or she is in the habit of making a small donation as a token exercise, wherewith the conscience is assuaged again. However, it is precisely with this and with sectarian proverbs and empty phrases that humankind on Earth is not making any progress, thus it is, in this way, not solving any of its numerous problems – especially not the greatest of all, namely that of the overpopulation, which is basically the source of all the other terrible things and problems that exist in the whole world.

The growth of humankind is outpacing food production by leaps and bounds. Only a reduction of humanity in a drastic form, as through rampantly spreading diseases, epidemics and famines and wars, and so forth, will be able to restore the balance, if the human beings themselves do not finally come to their senses and stop the further increase of the overpopulation through logical actions and counter-measures, by letting a rigorous and radical birth control and a purposive stop in births become reality, and also implementing this without pardon.

A brief word must also be dedicated to food production. For this purpose, a mere 12% of the entire continental land of the Earth can be used intensively for agriculture/horticulture. The remaining lands are non-cultivable areas, such as mountains, rocks, tundras, steppes, forests and deserts. However, the 12% of arable land is out of all proportion to the mass of humanity, since the nature-based overall living space required by a human being comes to 83,333 m², and in order to meet the food requirements of just one single human being, 4000 square metres of fertile arable horticultural land is required, which corresponds to a square of 63,245 x 63,245 metres. Translated to a human population of 6 thousand-million, this amounts to a total area of roughly 24 million square kilometres. But this land is not available, as the 12% of usable arable land on the entire planet amounts to just 18 million square kilometres, in other words 6 million square km less than the humanity of a 6 thousand-million population needs for food production. And with every new-born human being this discrepancy compounds, and moreover this 12% area does not grow, but it shrinks and disappears from day to day through erosion and desertification as well as through the construction of houses, roads, airfields, villages and mega cities, as well as through sports facilities of all kinds, and so on and so forth.

In order to produce 1 kg of beef, 9 kg of grain are necessary. 1 kg of meat is the equivalent of the daily nutritional value for a human being. Converted, however, the 9 kg of grain feed 16 human beings.

3 million trawlers are fishing in the world's oceans today and immensely decimating the fish populations and other life forms in the water. In the course of this, the fishing quota has tripled in the past 40 years. While in 1950 it was still 20 million tonnes of fish and other marine animals that found their way into the human food chain, by 1990 this rate increased to 100 million tonnes per year. However, the fishermen and women plunder not only the seas, but also the lakes, rivers and streams, and this without any qualms when it comes to earnings and profit – as long as the cash comes in. Everything is done very professionally, though unfortunately completely short-sightedly and irresponsibly from every point of view. However, this overexploitation has led to a worldwide state of overfishing of all seas and other bodies of water. Thus, many sea and lake dwellers and so on have already reached the limit of their regenerative capacity, or have already been exploited to such an extent that they are already dying out or have even become extinct.

Humankind is already in a situation where neither the fishermen and women nor the farmers and gardeners and so on will be able to keep up with the demographic growth. This means that the many tens of millions of new human beings being born every year and added to the existing mass, can only be fed if all those who are already in the world limit themselves in food consumption. This, however, is a completely new situation for human beings who will not integrate with that, consequently millions of human beings will keep dying of starvation, and in fact their numbers will increase more and more.

Air and climate have also become a problem. Compared to the size of the Earth, the atmosphere is actually just a paper-thin layer. For 500 million years, an elaborate natural and complex regulatory circuit kept the mixing ratio of the various respirable gases for terrestrial life forms constant. The atmospheric temperature was also kept within an extremely narrow margin. Thus, a natural protective shield was formed, under which an equally natural greenhouse climate of moderate nature was able to develop, in which diverse forms of life could prosper little by little. For about 100 years, however, everything has been changing, because humans have interfered with this fragile balance. The human beings themselves are now altering the Earth's climate with their technology and with their toxin productions and so on, and are generating a new, dangerous, life-hostile and destructive greenhouse effect that is gradually threatening to destroy everything. This is a deception of the human beings committed against themselves, ultimately leading to their own destruction and elimination and to that of all life forms, as well as to the planet.

23 thousand-million tonnes of CO₂ are emitted into the atmosphere every year through the burning of fossil fuels and through automobile and other engine exhaust gases, and so on; 1 million tonnes of CFCs by the chemical industry and by private consumption; 380 million tonnes of methane from livestock breeding, rice cultivation and rubbish dumps, along with 11 million tonnes of nitrogen monoxide, from nitrogen fertilisation and biomass burning.

It is indubitable that human beings alone are responsible for the ozone depletion, the greenhouse effect and thus for the climate change of the Earth – and the more human beings populate the world, the more serious and without any hope of rescue everything becomes. The already recognisable climate changes will indubitably lead to an increase in cyclones and other devastating natural events with catastrophic consequences.

Hence, the terribleness of overpopulation can also be rampant, because women are being suppressed, treated with contempt and mistreated, and are being condemned and regarded to be inferior to men. So they have no rights – a great many of them – and as a consequence they are strictly forbidden both abortion and contraception by the men, by means of a variety of threats, and especially by their belief. And this discrimination happens not only in Christianity and its sects, but also with other religions and their sects, as the following brief excerpts prove:

Islam/Quran - Surah 4

“Men are above women because Allah has given preference to the one part over the other.”

Confucius

“A hundred girls are not worth as much as one boy.”

Hinduism

“A woman must never be allowed to enjoy independence.”

Bible/Paulus to the Ephesians in the New Testament

“Let the women be subservient to their husbands as the master.”

These sayings about the value of women from the viewpoint of religions and many men probably speak for themselves. And this discriminatory use of language against women was not only being used in the past, but it is still ever-present. This also ensures, among other things, that women can be misused as baby-making machines, without having the chance to resist, which in turn guarantees that the overpopulation can be pushed forward briskly and unstopably.

The Catholic Church has built up a strong and mighty defence against contraception, or, in other words, against birth control. It is completely against all rationality of a regulation of births and birth control and also against all rights of a woman, and also against her desires of having the right to decide for herself about having descendants or terminating a pregnancy, in which case also the politicians in this sense curtail the rights of women and arrogate the privilege to themselves to sit in judgement on them and to deprive them of their freedom by means of state laws. As a result, especially in Catholic circles (as well as in other religious circles), the unbridled accretion of descendants can continue to be rampant, endangering all life on Earth and even the very existence of the planet itself. Continued uncontrolled procreation of descendants, and not initiating and implementing a stopping of births and a birth control, means to practise a culture of death. But the criminal Holy See of Rome, or the Pope and all those belonging to him, hold a tremendous might through which he (along with other religions and their representatives) is leading the entirety of humanity and the Earth with all its life forms into hardship and misery as well as into destruction and elimination.

The Pope and the Council of Cardinals of the Vatican form the highest authority of the Catholic Church, which includes some 1 thousand-million believers of all races on a worldwide scope. The encyclical Humanae Vitae of the then Pope, Paul VI, has been effective since 1968, the title of which is as follows: 'On the proper order of the transmission of human life'. Contained in article 14, the illicit ways of birth control have been accurately described, namely precisely in such a form as they have been hatched by the Pope and his cardinals, and so on, in order to discriminate against women; in order to curtail their rights and allowing the world population to accrue continuously and uncontrollably – to the detriment and destruction of humankind, of all life and of planet Earth.

Encyclical Humanae Vitae, item 14:

"The direct abortion of the generative process already begun and, above all, all direct abortion – even if conducted for medical purposes – are not a legitimate way of regulating the number of children and are therefore absolutely reprehensible.

In equal measure, to be condemned is the direct, permanent or temporary sterilisation of the man or the woman.

Similarly, any act is reprehensible which, either in advance or during the sexual intercourse or subsequent to it, is intended to prevent procreation, whether as a goal or as a means to an end.”

The only thing left to explain about this is: All that the Pope is saying is human-hostile and life-hostile and therefore must simply be ignored, for all of his drivel is irrelevant and none of what he brings up has any actual relation to all of what the world and humanity are facing.
